John Burke is a freelance writer, concentrated mainly on historical and topographical subjects but also producing light fiction. In the early 1970s he has collaborated with his wife on three 'Victorian Gothic' novels; and for the third of them, decided on a Fenland setting, they went to spend a week in Wisbech in order to get the 'feel' of the region.

'I had realized that a character would have to make more substantial than at first envisaged. At that time, I did not know Wisbech other than from pass round it; but reading somewhere that it had once been a thriving port, I invented a local merchant whose interests expanded until he can afford to have a couple of coasting vessels to build for him, and built up contacts with Holland and Germany. He bought himself a house on the outskirts of the town, became Lord Lieutenant of the County, and ultimately Lord Mayor of London.

'On the day of our arrival we had planned to saunter round the town talking and simply soak up the atmosphere. It began snow heavily, and we sought refuge in the little local museum. I was on one side of the room when my wife called me across: "Look at this – here he is!"

'What she had discovered in a large glass case was the character I had invented. Every detail were correct, even down to the relevant dates, with only one exception: he did not become Lord Mayor of London – merely High Sheriff!'
